Last week, the Rutas Naturbanas Foundation announced that they had reached an agreement with two real estate developers to promote the start of work of a second section of the Greenway, which will comprise 2.4 kilometers that will connect la Uruca and Sabana Norte in San José.

The Foundation has conceived the project as an alternative to escape urban road chaos by offering the possibility of a Greenway, shared routes that allow non-motorized forms of transportation (walking, running, rollerblading, skating or bike riding).

This project seeks to connect people to the city through nature, by integrating spaces for common use that, despite being in the San José city center, have been made invisible and ecologically damaged, as is the case of Torres and María Aguilar riverbanks.

Initiatives such as Rutas Naturbanas become even more relevant for Costa Rica, because they signal the involvement of the private sector in the country’s environmental policies and efforts toward decarbonization. In the last 15 days, thanks to this national decarbonization plan that sets the goal of gradually eliminating fossil fuels before 2050, the country and its policies have been internationally recognized by the United Nations Program for the Environment, by Champions of the Earth, in the category of "political leadership" and with distinctions such as The Montreal Protocol, for protecting the ozone layer.

Dentons Muñoz is proud to be an active collaborator with innovative projects such as Rutas Naturbanas, which generate a positive impact on the city, and congratulates its partner Eduardo Zúñiga, who, from his position as President of the Rutas Naturbanas Foundation, works hard to turn the project into reality.
